

Remote Sensing of Water Vapor and its Isotopes from the Aura TES satellite

We present an overview of past, present, and future capabilities for remote sensing of water vapor and its isotopes and the use of these measurements for informing about water sources as well as the exchange between vapor, clouds, and precipitation.

John Worden¹, David Noone², Kevin Bowman¹, and Jeonghoon Lee¹

1) Jet Propulsion Laboratory, California Institute of Technology

2) University of Colorado